After years of planning, building and anticipation, Parkland finally moved onto its new campus. This long awaited event made 1973-1974 an especially exciting and eventful time. Although the new facilities were ready for occupancy, work continued throughout the year. It was fascinating to watch changes as they occurred from one day to the next: trees were planted, stonework was completed, courtyards took form, and little by little the College moved toward completion.

After mid-year, major work had been completed, and the College was opened to visiting groups. Without exception these citizens were impressed with the functional and distinctive campus. Even more, however, they were impressed with Parkland students—with the attitudes, deportment, and obvious seriousness of purpose that they witnessed. It was this reaction by citizens that gave us our greatest cause for pride and satisfaction.

Parkland College is now about 75% completed. As the remaining facilities are added, student opportunities will grow, and Parkland will become an even better College; but this was the year it all began, and there will never be another time quite like it. My thanks to you for helping to make it a pleasant and cherished memory.
